WASHINGTON, April 11.—Approximately 1,800 officers and men will be engaged under Rear Admiral Strauss in the dangerous task of removing the $7,000 mines which American naval forces laid in the North Sea anti-submarine barrage. Eighteen mine sweepers will be used and attached to the fact as tenders will be twenty submarine chasers now overseas.

Besides the mines laid by the American fact under Admiral Strauss, 13,000 British mines had been placed in the North Sea barrage when the armistice was signed. It was mutually agreed that each government should sweep the seas of its own mines. Roughly estimated, the North Sea barrage covers an area of 7,000 square miles. Admiral Strauss now is on his way overteas. He hopes to complete the work before October,

DARIS, April 11 (By The Associated Press) .- When German officials in the cities occupied by the Ameri-5,000 Cars to Whisk Men cans issued orders for policemen to don their pre-war uniforms, they didn't realize what an attraction Boche helmets have for Yankees,

German policemen were rushed all along the Rhine by Americans who along the Rhine by Americans who couldn't resist the temptation to capture helmets from the heads of live Germans. As a consequence of the onslaughts upon the policemen, American officers asked German officials to discontinue the use of helmets. Ordinary caps are far less attractive than helmets as targets for snowballs, and peaceful German policemen are now able to walk their beats in safety and quiet.
